

MODESTY. Mr. Thomas B. Robertson, late Governor of Louisiana, having been invited to be again a candidate for that office, declined the invitation, saying "my ambition in that respect is satisfied, and experience has sufficiently taught me, that I can render in that situation no service at all commensurate with the important duties it imposes."